

NURSE MANAGEMENT

Pam Vanover is a senior account executive with MSI Consulting, a division of MSI International. She works with acute care hospitals placing CNO's, COO's, and director- and management-level nurses. Pam also recruits radiology techs of all modalities, cath lab techs, respiratory and physical therapists and pharmacists. Pam has been recruiting professionals since 1974.

"I've made a career of recruiting because I truly enjoy helping match the right person with the right opportunity," she said. "It's very rewarding when both your client and candidate thank you for providing value to them. I'm a good listener and find that people will open up to me to unearth their true feelings and motivations. I have often told candidates that a job search is one of the most important things they do. It not only affects them but their family and those around them and it should not be taken lightly. By helping the client and candidate set expectations, I help ensure a lasting and beneficial working relationship."

"After dealing with recruiters for about 10 years now, I'm still amazed when the unprofessional ones send me candidates who clearly don't fit my needs or they badger me to make a decision when I've asked them to give me some time," said Judy Morey, RN, clinical recruiter at Tift Regional Medical Center. "I like working with MSI's Pam Vanover because she's down-to-earth and easy to talk to, presents qualified candidates in a timely manner and isn't pushy. When the candidate we chose flew in from Pennsylvania and had a layover at the Atlanta airport, Pam met her there to get to know her in person. That says a lot for the kind of recruiter she is."
